Lucy Pearson's lively and engaging book examines British children's literature during the period widely regarded as a second golden age drawing extensively on archival material. Pearson investigates the practical and ideological factors that shaped ideas of good children's literature in Britain with particular attention to children's book publishing. Pearson begins with a critical overview of the discourse surrounding children's literature during the 1960s and 1970s summarizing the main critical debates in the context of the broader social conversation that took place around children and childhood. The contributions of publishing houses large and small to changing ideas about children's literature become apparent as Pearson explores the careers of two enormously influential children's editors Kaye Webb of Puffin Books and Aidan Chambers of Topliner Macmillan. Brilliant as an innovator of highly successful marketing strategies Webb played a key role in defining what were in her words the best in children's books while Chambers work as an editor and critic illustrates the pioneering nature of children's publishing during this period. Pearson shows that social investment was a central factor in the formation of this golden age and identifies its legacies in the modern publishing industry both positive and negative.

What does the national curriculum mean to pupils and teachers at key stage one? How have teachers and children coped with the ongoing changes? How has subject teaching altered in infant classrooms in a national curriculum for the early years? Angela Anning and her team of contributors set out to examine these issues. Infant teachers and their pupils were the guinea pigs for the introduction of the national curriculum over a five year period despite many reservations about a subject based curriculum for young children. Teachers struggled to interpret the national curriculum orders into a workable if not manageable curriculum in their classrooms. The contributors to this book each experts in a subject discipline have kept in close touch with practising and intending infant teachers as the national curriculum was operationalized in primary schools. They have used their teacher networks as well as research evidence to tap into the strategies used by infant teachers to cope with the planning delivery and assessment of the national curriculum subjects and the effects of government policy changes on young children's learning. Together the contributors provide a timely analysis of subject discipline based education for young children and look ahead to the prospects for those subjects at key stage one in the second half of the 1990s. This book will be essential reading for anyone involved in the education of young children.
